Detailed description of your personality

John Smith, you demonstrate an ability to balance the need to carve out moments all to yourself with the need to socialize. You are therefore not a gregarious person but neither are you a lone wolf. On the other hand, from the rational point of view you turn out to be quite balanced, in the sense that you reflect when there is a need to do so, although you prefer doing to pondering. In the area of emotion management, you show a fair, if delicate, balance between impulsivity and self-control. You may happen to lose your temper, but it is not the rule. Perfectionism is not among your main personality traits; let's say you usually put in the good will, but then you tend to get discouraged easily. Then there is liveliness, meant as the contrast between laziness and dynamism. You stand in the middle ground, adopting an active attitude when you are fit and indolent when the mood is not propitious. At the same you exhibit a noticeable degree of extroversion, which makes you in need of the attention of others and disinclined to carve out moments of isolation. In transcendental terms you could be defined as a sleeping consciousness. This happens because you realize that you behave in ways that are not always sensible, but the force of habit is stronger than the drive for self-improvement. Now let's deal with sensitivity. Your answers denote a low attention to others and to feeling in general. You are focused on concreteness. The area of sensitivity is closely related to that of tolerance, and in this case you manifest an ordinary level of forbearance with regard to injustice and incivility. On the other hand, you possess an uncommon creativity: conventions tend to cling to you, and there are times when you feel the urge to do something original and unique. In matters of sagacity, on the other hand, you show that you are quite shrewd and disenchanted with the world. You understand that things are almost never what they seem and you keep that in mind. However, it must be said that you are endowed with a normal degree of self-confidence, thus being able to deal with most situations, but not always. After self-confidence comes autonomy. This personality trait is hardly present, so you find yourself having to rely on others frequently. Materialism or Spirituality? Neither of them. In this area you position yourself exactly in the middle ground, indicating some interest in objects and money without completely closing the door to the intangible. The spiritual world takes us toward that of irony, in fact laughing is good for the soul. In your case we highlight a considerable amount of irony, so you love to joke and laugh in abundance, at least until the talk is screwed up. Now let's focus on the last of the personality traits: selfishness. Selfishness is not always harmful to others, so much so that in your case there appears to be a tendency to evaluate on a case-by-case basis, yet without any great moral references. As the saying goes: opportunity makes the thief. In conclusion we would like to point out to you that you are still quite young and that your psychological profile will continue to refine over time even giving you some surprises.
